ONE DAY IN POMPEII

OVER 150 PRICELESS ARTIFACTS INCLUDING BODY CASTS – MANY OF WHICH WILL MAKE THEIR NORTH AMERICAN DEBUT AT THE FRANKLIN INSTITUTE - EXPLORE THE LIFE AND DEATH OF THE THRIVING CITY OF POMPEII

New Exhibit Opening November 9 at The Franklin Institute

PHILADELPHIA October 2, 2013 — On August 24, 79 A.D., the Roman city of Pompeii was frozen in time by the catastrophic eruption of Mount Vesuvius, burying everything in its path for more than 1700 years. The same ash and debris from Vesuvius' unpredicted eruption that destroyed the city - also remarkably preserved it. One Day In Pompeii features over 150 precious artifacts on loan from the unparalleled collection of the Naples National Archaeological Museum in Italy, including wall-sized frescos, marble and bronze sculptures, jewelry, ancient Roman coins, and full body casts of the volcano's victims, many of which will make their North American debut when the exhibit opens at The Franklin Institute on Saturday, November 9.

Set in their original surroundings, the artifacts tell the story of life in the bustling city of Pompeii as it existed before time essentially stopped. The catastrophic strength and power of volcanoes is illustrated through an immersive CGI experience of the eruption of Mount Vesuvius, and the impact and destruction is evidenced by full body casts (human impressions created from cavities found in the volcanic matter), eerily preserved in their final moments.

The exhibition, which gives an extraordinary look at the city of Pompeii's archeological treasures that rarely leave Italy, will be on view in the Mandell Center of The Franklin Institute from November 9, 2013 through April 27, 2014. PECO, who has sponsored some of the Institute's most extraordinary exhibits such as: King Tut and Dead Sea Scrolls, and is currently the sponsor of the core exhibit Electricity, is the Presenting Sponsor of One Day in Pompeii.

"I am extremely thrilled to have the opportunity to bring this fascinating exhibition of world famous ancient archaeology to Philadelphia," said Dennis M. Wint, President and CEO of The Franklin Institute. "This unique exhibit has such a broad appeal. There is a significant amount of history, as well as art, archaeology and geology – plus it provides a special human connection to these people who lived some 2,000 years ago."

About the Exhibition

- An introductory theater will set the scene in a video with dramatic reconstructions that describe Pompeii and the nearby volcano.

- Visitors are transported back in time to 79 A.D., where they will embark on a journey through the ancient city, eventually experiencing the fateful morning of the eruption. In a media-rich, object-based, immersive experience, they will learn how Pompeii was a bustling commercial port and strategic military and trading center, and that its neighbor Herculaneum, also buried by Vesuvius, was an exclusive Mediterranean resort. Artifacts recreate a sense of this world as visitors discover how its people lived, loved, worked, worshipped, and found entertainment.
- The over 150 authentic artifacts will help bring the story of Pompeii to life. These remarkable objects include: Mosaics and frescoes, gladiator helmets, armor, and weapons, a ship's anchor, lamps, jugs, cups, plates, pots and pans and other household objects and furniture, jewelry, medical instruments, and tools.
- A simulated eruption will allow visitors to experience the devastating impact Mount Vesuvius had on this ancient city, culminating in the reveal of full body casts forever frozen in time.

One Day in Pompeii tells the remarkable tale of this city, hidden from view and forgotten for centuries until its rediscovery over 250 years ago. The sudden disaster that destroyed it also preserved it and over time archaeologists have uncovered a unique record of its daily life — roads, buildings, municipal services, paintings, mosaics, artifacts, and even preserved bodies. Ongoing excavations at the site provide an ever-evolving picture of everyday life at the height of the Roman Empire.
